Suffolk County Drug Treatment Court Honors Graduates

Suffolk County Executive Steve Levy to deliver keynote address

CENTRAL ISLIP, N.Y. - Suffolk County's Administrative Judge, H. Patrick Leis III, is pleased to announce that the Suffolk County Drug Treatment Court will be holding graduation ceremonies on Wednesday, December 5th at 11:00 a.m., in the Central Jury Room of the Cohalan Courthouse, located in Central Islip, New York.

The ceremonies will be presided over by the Honorable Patricia M. Filiberto, who is also the presiding judge of the Suffolk County Drug Treatment Court, and will feature Suffolk County Executive Steve Levy, who will be delivering the keynote address.

The thirty graduates have all successfully completed the Suffolk County Drug Treatment Court's program. In order to graduate, participants must be active in the program for a minimum of one year, be drug and alcohol free for the last six months, complete major goals and objectives in the treatment plan, pay all fees, complete an aftercare plan, and be active in employment, treatment, school or training.

The Suffolk County Drug Treatment Court began operation in September of 1996 as one of a handful of problem solving courts across New York State. As of October 2007, there are 171 drug courts in operation and another 25 drug courts in the planning stage across New York State. The goals of the drug court are to reduce drug addiction, drug abuse, and drug-driven criminal offenses in Suffolk County; to obtain immediate and effective treatment for those residents of Suffolk County whose drug addiction has brought them into contact with the criminal justice system and, lastly, to improve the efficiency of the criminal justice system in Suffolk County. Studies have shown this specialized court is extremely cost effective because it costs less to rehabilitate than to incarcerate and, in addition, those who graduate have a much lower recidivism rate compared to non-program participants.
