POST-SEPARATION PARENTING OF MEN WHO BATTER

Lundy Bancroft

KEY CONCEPTS

- Domestic violence is underreported, not overreported, in divorce and paternity
- Family court orders play a critical role in enabling or impeding children's recovery

KEY CONCEPTS

- Domestic violence perpetration is a leading indicator of child abuse perpetration
- The primary risks to children from batterers post-separation are psychological ones.

KEY CONCEPTS

- There is an established profile of men who use violence against intimate partners.
- A majority of intractable custody disputes involve histories of domestic violence.

KEY CONCEPTS

- Commonly accepted measures of credibility can be misleading in cases involving domestic violence allegations.
- The court needs access to extensive information of specific kinds.

KEY CONCEPTS

- The mother needs to take steps to keep her children safe post-separation.
- Some family courts criticize or punish battered mothers for their appropriate protective efforts.

THE BATTERER IN FAMILY COURT

- Denial, minimization
- Accusations against the mother of mental health problems, substance abuse, and unfit parenting.

THE BATTERER IN FAMILY COURT

- Accusations of mutual abuse.
- Will tend to outperform the mother in psychological testing.

THE BATTERER IN FAMILY COURT

- Will commonly present as the more “friendly parent.”
- Will not seem capable of the kind of cruelty or abuse he is being accused of.

THE BATTERER IN FAMILY COURT

- Good under observation.
- Curry favor with the children.
- Can gain power from children's emotional starvation.
- Can sometimes be cunning.

Post-Separation Risks

- Abduction
- Homicide
- Stalking

Post-Separation Risks

- Litigation for custody or unsupervised visitation
- Ongoing damage to mother-child relationships
- Physical risk to mother during exchanges and at other times

Post-Separation Risks

- Physical, sexual, or psychological abuse of child (retraumatizing)

- Neglectful, inconsistent, and unsafe parenting

Post-Separation Risks

- Exposure to domestic violence in father's new relationship
- Learning attitudes and behaviors that lead to domestic violence perpetration or victimization
- Aligning with the batterer, "identifying with the aggressor"

Post-Separation Risks

- Sabotage of healing relationships, such as professional therapy or psychoeducational groups.
- Ongoing damage to sibling relationships.

More considerations....

- How to best promote children's healing
- How to best promote mother-child relationships
- How to best promote sibling relationships
- How to best promote mother's healing
- How to best promote father's reform, acceptance of responsibility for his actions

Visitation Tiers

- Supervised visitation center
- Professionally-supervised off-site
- Mutually acceptable lay supervisor

Visitation Tiers

- Brief unsupervised day visits
- Longer unsupervised day visits
- Overnights (generally not recommended)

Additional Visitation Concepts

- Burdens of proof
- Go back into greater restrictions as needed
- Extensive contact rarely best unless the batterer makes extensive changes

“Solutions” That Don’t Work

- Telling the parents to “learn to get along for the good of the children.”
- Dismissing the mother’s concerns.
- Telling the mother that the abuser has changed.
- Treating both parents harshly.

Solutions That Do Work

- Creating strict visitation conditions for the batterer.
- Taking the mother’s concerns seriously.
- Periodic reviews of compliance with court orders.

Solutions That Do Work

- Using specialized domestic violence services for the batterer, the victim, and the children.
- Improving communication with other courts and with child protection.

Solutions That Do Work

- Requiring batterers to pay for supervised visitation, children's therapy, and mother's legal fees.
- Impede batterers' ability to use frequent court dates as an abuse strategy.

Solutions That Do Work

- Ask batterer programs to provide reports that evaluate meaningful indicators of change.
- Focus on children's healing and recovery.

Common Assessment Errors

- Inadequate understanding of impact of battering on mother's parenting
- Using typologies to assess risk to children (as opposed to using a "spectrum" approach)
- Conclusions or recommendations not following from the evidence

Common Assessment Errors

- Lack of specialized domestic violence and child abuse training and supervision
- Over-interpretation / misinterpretation of psychological testing data; failure to seek "convergent validity" (APA Guidelines)
- Strong influence of personal feelings about the alleged batterer

Common Assessment Errors

- Over-interpretation/misinterpretation of observations of children and statements made by them
- Use of psychological theories that are not applicable to abuse or trauma
- Failure to perform thorough investigation, over-reliance on clinical assessment

Common Assessment Errors

- Assuming that children's emotional and behavioral problems are caused by the interparental conflict
- Using parental alienation theories to account for allegations of child abuse or domestic violence
- Using parental alienation theories to account for children's desire to avoid contact with an abusive parent
