

Defendants contend that the invoices attached to plaintiff's moving papers are self serving and that, in fact, all of the initial purchase orders and bills sent to Homestead Development Corporation were directed solely to Homestead Development and that many of these were signed by both parties. Furthermore, defendants contend that Allison Homes never entered into any agreement with the plaintiff. Defendants also contend that the invoices submitted by the plaintiff as part of its motion which lists Homestead Development/Allison Homes are hand written, not signed by any representative of the defendants, and were never submitted to the defendants. Hassall, in his affidavit, speculates that "they appeared to be internal documents of the plaintiff." Finally, besides challenging the admissibility of plaintiff's proof, defendants have wholly failed to establish that a corporate veil should be pierced, inasmuch as all three corporate defendants are existing corporations, duly registered with the State of New York, that keep their own books, pay their own bills, and enter into their own contracts.
